SHELTON TO TRAIN 150 CITY EMPLOYEES

This fall 150 city employees will be trained at Shelton State Community College through the new commercial drivers license program that has been mandated by the federal government and the Alabama Department of Public Safety.

Shelton State is one of the state's five test centers for the new commercial drivers license program. As a designated test site, the college offers preparation classes for the written portion of the Commercial Drivers License Exam.

Beginning October 1, 1990 and continuing through April 1, 1992, all commercial motor vehicle operators must be tested and certified for a Commercial Drivers License (CDL). This law which was passed by Congress in 1986 is designed to ensure safety on the highways.

Workers scheduled to be tested through the new program include city employees from the departments of Public Works, Water Works, and Transportation. Classes will be held in the evenings during the months of October and November.

According to Tuscaloosa Mayor Alvin Dupont, the city will support the employees in this training.

"This new law, mandated by the federal government, concerns the city to the extent that we will be sure our employees receive the training they need in order to pass the CDL," Mayor Dupont said.

Classes will be held in the Beatrice Morrison Industrial Training Center located on Shelton's Fifteenth Street Campus. Anyone who is interested in learning more about Shelton State's commercial drivers license program should contact Bill Hogue, 391-2415.

AMY GRIMES EXHIBITS WORKS AT SHELTON STATE

Tuscaloosan Amy Grimes will exhibit a collection of gouaches and watercolors at the Junior College Library of Shelton State Community College beginning October 1 and continuing through October 25. Grimes says she is an artist who enjoys capturing her view of the world around her. As a child she grew up playing in her grandmother's florist and greenhouse and has always had a love for flowers and plants. Many of her recent paintings are just a glimpse of nature "caught for just a moment longer," she says. She loves to paint the rolling landscapes of Alabama and the Florida coastline.

Although most of Grimes' botanicals are done in gouache or watercolor, she may also paint lush flowers in oils. She says the work she has done in gouache is "a nice medium between working in watercolor and oils. You can work in wet washes or heavier opaque effects."

Grimes has a degree in art education and has taught school and worked in her husband's architectural practice. Yet, she still spends most of her time in her gallery painting. She says,"Time just isn't slow enough for me to get every idea recorded on paper!"

The works now on exhibit at Shelton State include Grimes' most recent efforts in florals, landscapes, and a few buildings. She is currently working on figure drawings and portraits in oils and pastels.

The exhibit is open to the public at no charge during regular library hours at the Skyland campus; Monday-Thursday, 8:00-9:00 p.m.; Friday, 8:00 a.m. -4:00 p.m.
